What is Trauma Sensitive Yoga?

Trauma Sensitive Yoga has been established as an adjunctive treatment for Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). It is a treatment option underpinned by current Neuroscience, Post Traumatic Growth Theory, and Attachment Theory. Trauma Sensitive Yoga is non-invasive, and safety and choice are paramount in its delivery. Trauma Sensitive Yoga targets and develops self- inquiry, affect and sensory modulation and impulse arousal control, self- regulation, and sensory awareness. TSY shows a significant reduction in PTSD.

TSY works with the emotional and physical imprints left on the body after the trauma —the body's automatic response to protect itself. This response, often referred to as our fight, flight, submit or freeze reaction, is activated by the sympathetic nervous system. Trauma survivors often experience this sympathetic nervous system response as a chronic state long after the trauma is past. Who benefits from practicing Trauma Sensitive Yoga?

Trauma Sensitive Yoga empowers the participants to develop and improve:

- Self-regulation skills by noticing bodily sensations signalling emotions
- Increased mindfulness skills and ability to stay in the present moment
- Awareness of their body (both internally and moving in space)
- Relationship and connection to their body
- Breath awareness to support working with states of hyperarousal, stress and anxiety
- Relaxation and self-soothing skills
- Increased sense of mastery and control by provision of choices
